Jackson is an attorney in the firm's Business Litigation practice. Simply put, Jackson is a lawyer who represents business in lawsuits. His clients include insurance providers, financial institutions, real estate developers, product sellers, healthcare organizations, and utility providers. This wide-reaching practice has allowed Jackson to work on lawsuits involving contract law, eminent domain practices, creditors' rights, cannabis law, personal injury, and employment disputes.

With each case Jackson takes on, he has one goal in mind: to reach an efficient solution that leaves his clients happy and their interests protected. During his time with Stites, Jackson has negotiated favorable settlements for his clients, saving them hundreds of thousands of dollars. He has also seen numerous successes at the early stages of litigation, with cases against his clients being severely limited in their scope or thrown out entirely.

And Jackson prides himself on staying up to date on how the law develops so that his clients are never left in the dark. For example, in light of Kentucky's legalization of medical cannabis, Jackson hit the books to better understand how this could impact current and future businesses across the Commonwealth. This endeavor enabled him to become one of the forerunners on cannabis legal practice in Kentucky, speaking to healthcare conglomerates on the impact cannabis could have on their practice.

MORE THAN STITES & HARBISON

After law school, Jackson clerked for Judge David J. Hale of the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Kentucky (2023-24). Prior to joining the firm, he was a summer associate in the Louisville office during the summers of 2021 and 2022 and a legal extern for the Fayette County Attorney's Office (January-May 2022). Jackson also interned for the Honorable Brian C. Edwards of the Jefferson County Circuit Court. When he's not working, Jackson is probably at a Louisville Cardinals basketball or football game, reading a fantasy novel, playing some PS5, investigating a new local brewery, or out hunting with his dogs, Maple and Pepper Ann.
